The George Washington Carver School

By Ann Rivington

The George Washington Carver School, 57 W. 125th St., Harlem's new "people's institute," as Dr. Max Yergan lovingly calls it, held its first classes last night.

Dr. Yergan, who heads its board of directors, is not alone in his feeling of affectionate pride in the brand new educational institution you'll find behind the gold-lettered door, one flight up from the heart of Harlem. Every member of the board, every teacher, white as well as Negro, every citizen of the community who has discovered the new school, has much the same feeling.

Gwendolyn Bennett, who resigned from the administrative staff of the School for Democracy to become the school's director, will tell you why.

A PART OF THE WAR EFFORT

"This school is owned and operated," she says, "by people who believe that the man in the street is a creative force that must be developed."

The school is part of the war effort and part of the future, Miss Bennett believes. It will help to cement Negro and white unity, and "to make the citizens of Harlem better able to take their rightful place in society after this war is won."

One look around the headquarters tells you it's a special kind of an institution. What was a drab floor of rooms and offices has been made glorious with paint. Two of the artist teachers—Norman Lewis and Elizabeth C. White—"made it over" in grey and rose, green, buff and blue.

DECORATING INEXPENSIVE

The Rev. Alger Adams, assistant pastor of St. Augustine's Church, in Brooklyn, who will give lectures on religion, repaired and painted the chairs in the room where his classes will meet.

Miss Bennett, at a press conference that preceded the school's formal opening last Sunday evening, let out the secret that the entire decorating cost was less than $100. She also confessed that just before she dressed for the opening she herself finished scrubbing one of the classroom floors. "This is a people's school," she said, "and there's nothing I wouldn't do for a people's school."

That spirit is catching on in the community. People see the letters on the door, and "drop in" from across the street or down the block to register for a course and offer to help out with anything they can do from carpentry to typing.

The score of courses already scheduled gives a wide choice for cultural and practical education. Registration so far shows that the three most popular studies are Negro History, How to Make a Dress, and How to Write Good English. Miss Bennett herself will deliver the Negro History lectures. She and Dr. Alain L. Locke of Howard University will lecture on Cultural Contributions of the American Negro. Dr. Lawrence Reddick, curator of the Schomburg Collection in the 136th St. Public Library, will teach an advance course in Source Study of Negro History.

FERDINAND SMITH TEACHES

Teachers of trade union and labor courses include Ferdinand Smith of the National Maritime Union, Edward S. Lewis, Dorothy K. Funn,

Because the American Negro must find his place in a world at war for freedom, there will be a course entitled, The World Is Smaller Than You Think, whose teachers will include Kumar Goshal, Liu Liang-Mo, Dr. Locke and Dr. Yergan.

Lecturers on Race Relations in the City will include Dr. E. Franklin Frazier of Howard University, author of "The Negro Family"; Dr. Charles S. Johnson, Fiske University, and Dr. Alfred Lee of Wayne

University, whose book on the Detroit riots will come out next month.

Dr. Philip Foner of the School for Democracy will teach American History, and John Harmon, head of the Harlem office of the OPA, will be among the lecturers on Your Dollar and How to Spend It.

PEOPLE SUPPORT SCHOOL

In keeping with the aims of a people's school, the tuition is surprisingly low—$2 for an eight-weeks course. "The school will be supported by the community," Miss Bennett says serenely, and she has reason for thinking so. An original contribution of $1,500 from Paul Robeson, Judge Hubert Delaney (both are on the Board of Directors) and an anonymous donor has already been augmented by $1,120 that "just came in," the contributions of sympathetic citizens.

The school's board of directors is a roster of distinguished men and women, white as well as Negro, in the world of culture and scholarship. In addition to those already listed, it includes Dr. Leonard Covello, principal of the Benjamin Franklin High School, Ben Davis, Jr., Communist candidate for the City Council, Dr. Alice Keliher of New York University, Councilman A. Clayton Powell, Canada Lee, Thyra Edwards of the People's Voice, Harcourt Tynes and the Rev. Charles Young Trigg.
